WHITE STONES

A train’s whistle screams.
Anyone can see how steam eats the rails, any except the grandfather steeled behind the wheel of a stalled Buick.
Look twice. It’s death
seated inside,
beating against the glass
hands
clean as white stones.